Representing Yourself in Court

The Maine State Law and Legislative Reference Library cannot offer legal advice or interpret the law.

Persons who represent themselves, also called pro se litigants, are held to the same standards of preparation and compliance with court rules and procedures that attorneys must follow, so you should carefully consider whether your one chance to have a case resolved in your favor might be at risk if you proceed without the help of a lawyer. (“Representing Yourself.” State of Maine Judicial Branch. 28 April 2016.)

Finding a Lawyer

Maine State Bar Association Lawyer Referral Service

For a small fee, this service will help you find a lawyer for your specific situation.

URL: <https://www.mainebar.org/page/AttorneyRequest>

Unbundled Legal Services

If you can’t afford a lawyer to handle your whole case and you’re willing to do some of the legal work yourself, you can arrange for limited, or “unbundled”, legal services. In other words, “you pay less in legal fees if you can do some of the work.”
